

Texas Oranges

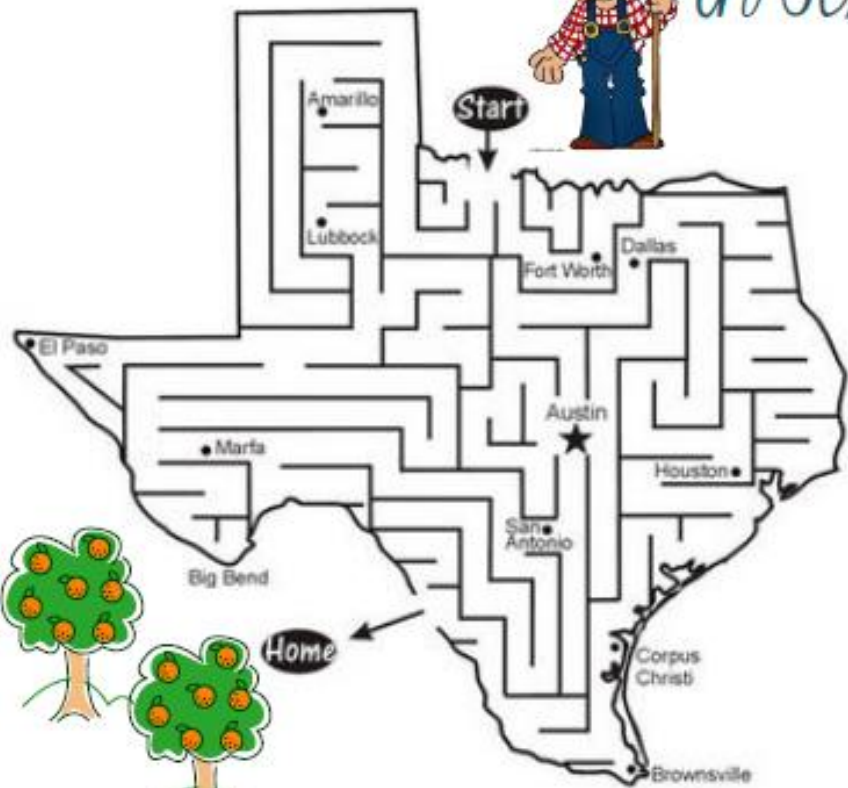

There are very few fruits that are as sensitive to climate variations as citrus. South Texas' sub-tropical climate is absolutely perfect for growing Texas Oranges. The days are filled with sunshine while the nights offer warm tropical breezes coming off the Gulf of Mexico. Texas citrus growers carefully maintain crop quality through successful irrigation techniques, growing conditions and extensive research. Sandy loam soil, found in the Lower Rio Grande Valley, also provides all of the necessary elements that the tree roots crave for strength and endurance. Texas oranges are tree-ripened and hand-picked to ensure the best quality possible. After picking, area shippers wash, inspect, grade and hand-pack the fruit. It's then shipped to supermarkets across the United States and Canada.

Help the farmer find his orchard in Texas!

Color the Orange your favorite color!

Orange

